Individual Guidance Stressed in Advisory Group Program

Individual guidance for all students is the aim of the Torrance Unified School District, members of the Torrance Educational Advisory Committee

Dr. Warren Hamilton, director of special services, who led a discussion of the guidance and counseling program of the district, said there are several important facts to the program for helping each child get the right education for his future work or schooling.

1. Individualized guidance is needed for each student. 2. All students, both brighter and slower, receive this help. 3. The guidance and instructional programs are not separate, but go hand in hand.

4. The parent and the teacher are the key parts of the program. 5. The school district has trained psychologists and other personnel to help parents and teachers.

6. Guidance is a "team" effort by all persons involved—school personnel, parents, students, and teachers.

Robert Dollarhide, school psychologists, told the group that aptitude and achievement tests are given to all students throughout their school careers.

Special classes for students whom tests show are top academically are provided by the district, Dale Harter, principal of North High School told the group.

In many cases, lower classes are allowed to take more difficult courses usually reserved for juniors and seniors, he said.

Reporting on the work experience program, Hamilton said that the district divides its program into three parts—selling, various other vocational work, and exploratory work in various fields.

Both freshmen and seniors study various vocations in class, to help them get an idea of their future job preference and to help them take appropriate courses.
